idX Louisville begins recycling solid wood waste

ST. LOUIS, MO—idX Corporation, the preeminent manufacturer of consumer environments, has taken another step forward in its sustainability leadership, as it begins recycling solid wood waste.

idX Louisville/PanelWorks has installed a new Vecoplan Shredder, which allows the facility to recycle solid wood waste. The waste is then sold to a major recycling company that repurposes it for use as boiler fuel pellets and industrial spill kits.

idX Louisville has been recycling sawdust since 2006.

With the combined solid waste/sawdust program, idX Louisville/PanelWorks expects to recycle an estimated 19,000 tons (over 38 million pounds) of wood waste annually.

This waste previously would have gone to the landfill.

"Within the next 6 months, we will recycle as much as 95% of our wood waste," said Vincent Esposito, General Manager of idX Louisville. "As a result of our capital investments in sustainability, idX Louisville is now among the leaders in wood waste recycling in the retail fixture industry."
