He has relocated back to the U.S. from Shanghai, China. During the first half of 2020, he will spend time at each U.S. manufacturing plant while settling into his new role in leading idX.

"We are excited to have Jeff as the next leader of the idX team," said Scott Stewart, vice president of Commercial for UFP Construction, a business segment of idX parent company UFP Industries (formerly Universal Forest Products). "As we continue to adapt to the changing markets and solidify idX's position as the global leader in retail, office and hospitality environments, it is critical to have a leader like Jeff with the expertise to execute the best solutions for customers around the world."

Headquartered in St. Louis, Missouri, with more than 20 offices worldwide, idX is one of the largest retail environment manufacturers in the industry.
